Ever heard of airplanes that suffer identity problems? The 71-0291 fits this description quite well. TF-15A, F-15B, F-15E.. Second prototype of double-seater, first flight in Oct. 1973, used for testing FAST-pack conformal fuel tanks and chin pod. Touring the world to aid sales in bicentennial color scheme. Became a demonstrator of Strike Eagle in 1980.

This really sounds like a family problem, as its 71-0290 brother went even further with F-15STOL/MTD, NF-15B (NASA 837), ACTIVE, LANCETS, IFCS, SBRD/ECANS, HISTEC...

As we are dealing with Strike Eagles here - the 71-0291 is where the whole story begins. It does so in handsome European-One cammo - instantly making it stand out. This machine carries over another feature of early F-15s - the turkey feathers adorning the nozzles of P&W F100s (you may be interested to check our photoetched detail set SO21446 to take care of that particular bit).

Ok, finally the Vulgaris part.
Not vulgar. Vulgaris: ordinary, common, derived from the masses.

At the time we are writing this - 2018 - it is/was difficult to finish a 1/144th scale F-15E model in anything else than special paint scheme. Which is rather annoying. Especially that in the uniform masses of Strike Eagles there is so many interesting things happening. The mighty Eagles are used and abused, often visiting places such as airshows, Mach Loop, Axalp and get to be heavily photographed in the process. And those are regular F-15Es, not the special anniversary parrots.

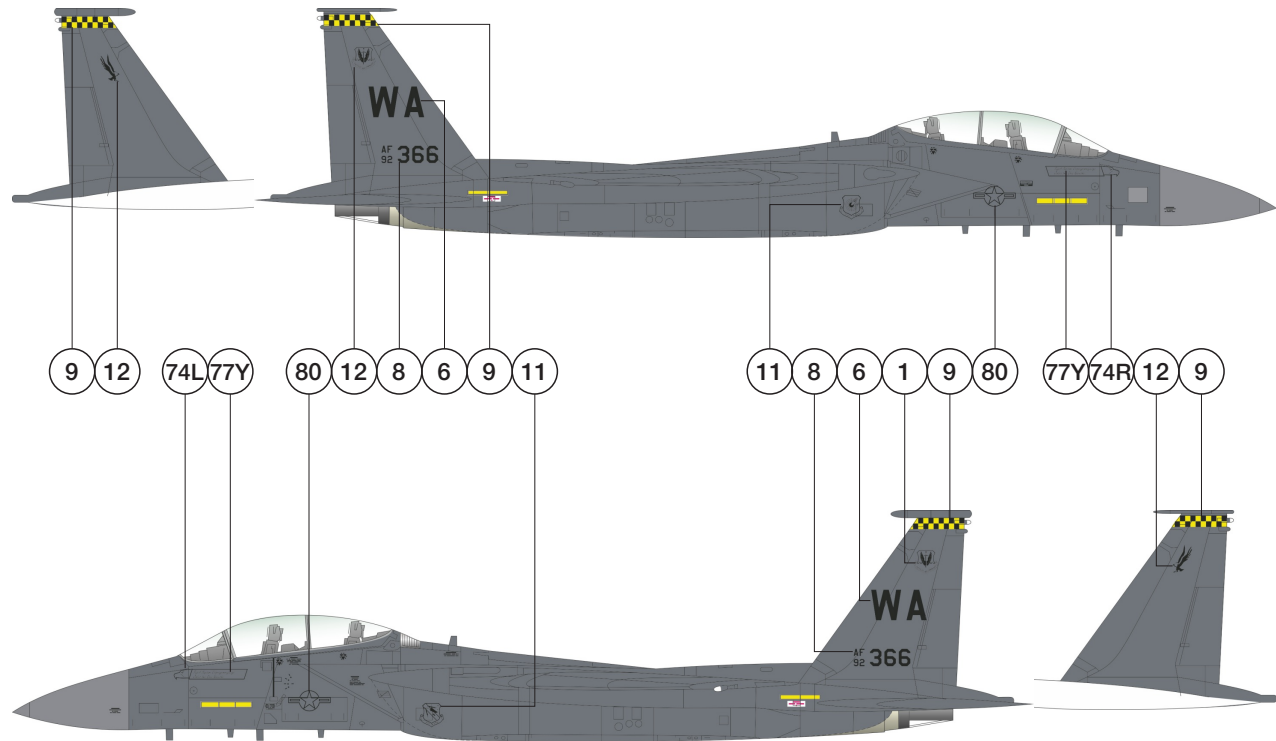

The theme color for the remaining pages is FS36118 and you better be good at "spot the difference" game.

We strongly encourage to collect photographic evidence to support your case, because even on the plainest of plain F-15E there are many things happening. Color variation between aluminum skin and dielectric covers can be nil or considerable. Refueling receptacle door gets scratched. Control surfaces get replaced with mismatched parts. Fluids spill and attract dust to some areas.

Where to begin?
How about random F-15E - 92-0366?

91-0318 top & bottom views.

They must have been in a real hurry to be able to get this one to Machynlleth Loop in time. Speedbrake is probably in natural color of composite it is made of and one F-15C is very unhappy about the way it lost its left stabilator. There are more interesting things happening on this machine in terms of wear and dirt. Search through jetphotos, airliners, airplane-pictures database is highly recommended. The search will probably also show very clearly the sad truth that this decal set is only skimming the surface of interesting Strike Eagles...
